Trustees Knew Of The Suit And Hence His Claim

GEN. STREETER ASKED TO EXPLAIN HIS IDEA ON INCOMPETENCY ISSUE

Concord, N. H., May 24.—When the second day of the Christian Science case opened in the Superior Court at ten o'clock this forenoon, there was a great contrast to that of yesterday. Then the courtroom was filled to overflowing, but today there was scarcely a handful of spectators on hand. During the forenoon, however, the number perceptibly increased, most of the spectators being women. All of the principals and the learned counsel in the case were early in their usual places, including Samuel J. Elder and Hon. William A. Howe, who represent the Massachusetts defendants. Immediately upon assuming his place on the bench Judge Robert N. Chamberlin asked General Streeter if at the time the trustees assumed charge of the property they did so with the knowledge that the suit in equity had been brought. The court asked the question, he said, as it might have a bearing in the case later on. General Streeter replied that certainly the trustees had that knowledge.

At this point ex-United States Senator Chandler spoke for the first time. Addressing the court he said he would like to have General Streeter's view on this phase of the case. He wanted his view because the general has the closing of the case and because the (Chandler) is satisfied that the opposing attorney must have views on the subject. Senator Chandler argued that yesterday General Streeter said he would explain how the question of competency entered into this case, but he did not hear him do so. He felt that he ought to have a chance to reply to the general's views. Judge Chamberlin said that if in closing General Streeter made any statements that should be answered, Senator Chandler would be given the privilege.

Attorney DeWitt C. Howe of the counsel for the "next friends" then began the opening for that side of the case. At the start off he said the plaintiffs, like the defendants, had filed many affidavits, including a long letter from Mrs. Eddy's son, but that unless the court desired he would not read them, as they are already properly before the court. Judge Chamberlin said he could use his own judgment on that matter.

Counsel then said the inferences are that the conveyances of Mrs. Eddy have been made in the past for a purpose, and after the reason for such conveyances had ceased the property had come back to Mrs. Eddy, and probably would in this case when the reasons for the trust have ceased.

Attorney Howe said that yesterday General Streeter improperly traveled far outside the limits of the present action and that for him to properly reply he would also have to do so. Mr. Howe said that he and his associates agree with General Streeter on many of the citations he made yesterday. He said, however, that he could not agree with the general that "next friends" could be removed without cause. "The cases General Streeter cited," said the attorney, "are all right, but they are wrong propositions. My brother Streeter promised to tell us how Mrs. Eddy's capacity can be determined outside of this case. He gave us two institutions on the subject, but as yet we cannot see that he has completed his answer."

The attorney said that matter of the giving deed of trust after the equity suit had been begun was not only not legal effect but was highly improper. He added that the defendants in this case would much rather have the trustees, associates of Mrs. Eddy, prosecute the suit than to have the next friends. "Naturally," he continued, "anyone would prefer a sham battle instead of a real battle. The defendants in this case are not here because they are curious, but because they want the case turned over to the board of trustees and then whitewashed." Baker, et al, want to be substituted for the "next friends," so that a false issue can be substituted for a real issue. "Whether Mrs. Eddy is competent or not, she thinks as Frye thinks, and she will continue to do so as long as he stays there. There is no other way." Continuing on this line Attorney Howe said, "They say this action is unfounded; that Frye in his books has not given himself away. Who says he has? We have not accused Frye of laying bare on his books and misappropriation of funds. The trustees want the case turned over to them so it can be sifted."

Counsel then took up the value of the affidavits filed by the trustees as to the competency of Mrs. Eddy and also of the affidavit of expert Harvey S. Chase. He said that the only true way to get at the facts in the case is by cross-examination. Regarding Mr. Chase's interviews with Mrs. Eddy at Pleasant View, Mr. Howe said: "Suppose on cross-examination of Mr. Chase it should be shown that his wife had been a student of a college of healing and had practised as a healer, that Mr. Chase is believer so far as to have undergone a treatment; that it should appear that when Mr. Chase visited Mrs. Eddy that she crossed herself and talked with him about healing, might that not have influenced him in his affidavit?"

The attorney maintained that as the result of the testimony thus far put in the case the competency of Mrs. Eddy would fall like a house of cards. That there is no way to get at the value of a piece of testimony without cross-examination.

GOSSIP OF A DAY COLLECTED BY OUR CORRESPONDENT

Kittery, May 25.

Kittery people are sorry to hear of the sale of the famous old schooner Northern Eagle, which in command of Capt. Sim McLeod, has fished out of this harbor for twenty-three consecutive winters. The vessel is the oldest fisherman in Gloucester and both she and her crew are well known in all fishing localities. The youngest man of the crew on board is fifty-one years old and all have been with "Cap'n Sim" for the quarter century during which he has commanded her. It is hoped that he and his faithful crew will soon be seen here again in a new and better vessel. The Northern Eagle sailed from here Friday for Gloucester, after which she will proceed to her new home, Pensacola, Fla. She was built in 1857 and is of thirty-five tons.

At a special meeting of the members of the Kittery Yacht Club on Thursday evening, it was voted to build a kitchen, twenty-two by fifteen feet, with locker room. An attempt will be made to secure the Naval band for the opening exercises on Memorial day.

THE PARK COMMISSION

There can be no doubt that the appointment of a park commission will all a long felt want in Portsmouth. The parks of the city have long suffered from neglect and the peculiar phase of the situation was that no one could justly be blamed for the conditions which existed. There has been no one charged with the duty of keeping the parks in shape. The commissioners appointed had little authority except as caretakers and even though they did all they could they were powerless to accomplish a great deal of good.

Langdon Park particularly has been sadly neglected. In the cases of Goodwin and Haven Parks, the results of neglect are less apparent, because these breathing spaces have been cared for as well as they could be and the only thing to be regretted is that they have not been improved as we would like to see them. The Langdon Park commissioners have long been dead and the park itself, naturally a most attractive place of resort, has become little better than an eyecore.

There have always been, without doubt, public spirited men in Portsmouth ready and willing to serve as park commissioners without pay and to do all in their power to improve conditions. The trouble has been that there was no authority for their appointment and so many other things have demanded attention that legislation for the benefit of the parks has apparently been forgotten. It is gratifying to note that this fault is to be remedied and that authority is to be given to improve and beautify the public resting places of the city.

The establishment of a suitable playground for the children has long been desired, but it was only too evident that the city could not afford the expense and no one has approached those people who might be willing to contribute to so worthy an object. With a park commission empowered to accept gifts and to apply them, it may be possible to give the boys of Portsmouth a place where they can play baseball and other games without violating city or state ordinances. We all realize that boys should not be allowed to play baseball in the streets, but they can hardly be blamed for doing so, when there is practically no other place for them to play.

We do not expect a park commission to work miracles, but we believe that it will be able to accomplish a vast amount of good. Its appointment is an experiment worth trying, in any event.

At my window the little curtain tugs to be free, And it writhes with the wanderlust winning me. While the breeze, like a vagabond, breeds mutiny.

My very geranium knows it's new year, The old bound on the rug whines and flickers in his ear, And the bird in the cage is a heart-break to hear.

For Spring issues now, through the whole of creation, A summons to freedom, a glad proclamation Of glorious world-wide emancipation.

So make haste, O my flower, to thrill into bloom!

And go free, O my bird, from the cage of your doom!

—Rupert Hughes in Harper's Weekly.

And They Are All Deserved.

If good wishes could restore health, President Tucker would be already a well man. Such tributes to the character, ability and usefulness of any man, as have been called forth all over the country by the announcement of his illness, have rarely been witnessed before.—Rochester Courier.

This One Came Too High.

When Deer May Be Killed.

Under the law passed at the recent session of the Legislature, a farmer may shoot any deer that kills him or runs off with his youngest child or roots up any of his forest growth. As deer have been reported as becoming unusually savage, it is safe to say that venison will not be unknown on many a farmer's table henceforth.—Somersworth Free Press.

Savagery in Franklin.

No man goes wrong and pockets the money of the bank, or a lot of trust funds, they say he has a "financial brain storm," and try to put him into an asylum. If when they get him there they would put him in a straight jacket and solitary confinement he might get the punishment he deserves.—Franklin Journal.

Horror We Do Not Know.

If distance lends enchantment to the view, it also, fortunately for our sensibilities, dulls appreciation of horror. Of these few are more appalling than the plague in India and the famine in China. The Indian visitation at last reports had in six weeks claimed nearly half a million victims. The Chinese famine is doubling even more.—Exeter News-Letter.

Only One Season This Year So Far. A Concord man describes New England as having two seasons—Winter and late in the Fall, but we think the Frenchman had a better definition. He said we had two seasons, Winter and Fourth of July.—Concord Patriot.

BICYCLE RIDING IS AGAIN GOOD STYLE

Improvements that have helped to bring about a revival.

Where is your wheel? Don't say you haven't one, because there are enough of them hanging in the attics and entries and barns to mount at least half of the men and women who are just now thinking about taking a spring tonic.

Have the tonic by all means, and go looking for it on a bicycle. It's waiting for you in the green freshness that lies just outside the smoky town. It will meet you half way if you seek it on the shady side paths or the hard, smooth highways. You will find it in the long, deep draughts of ozone-laden air that will invade and vivify lung cells which have been throttled and starved while you looked over a desk this last six months—or has it been six years since you gave them the chance that their Creator intended them to enjoy with every waking moment? Do you know that there is not much difference between the appearance of the lunge of an habitual city dweller and those of a worker in a coal bank? The miner breathes the fine culm in its raw state, but the toiler in the business district has mighty little the best of it, so far as smoke clouds, dust whorls and foul air generally are concerned.

Little wonder then, that when the winter is past, with its close, ill-ventilated living rooms and offices, that a tonic is wanted, and wanted badly, and—to modernize an old saw—the very best thing for the inside of a man is the outside of a wheel.

So take down the old bicycle and give it the overhauling it has wanted so long. It's an even thing that it is still, rideable, and its tense wire spokes, impinging on the spring breeze, will hum again that exhilarating old tune that no rider can ever forget.

There's another reason for looking up the wheel; it's in style again. Yes, indeed, they are riding this year as they haven't these ten years back. There never was a real good reason for hanging the wheel away, for there are few days, or weeks at the most, when a wheel cannot be used in this region. Perhaps the sport was so good that it was overdone. People get too much of even a good thing. Do you recall how editors and doctors and physical culture sharps all over the country deplored the change? Yet people walked while they knew that a wheel would actually save them time, money and health!

But the bicycle, it seems, had a cycle all its own, and now the revolution being complete, the wheel is being industriously rediscovered. And this is not merely a theory or a whim. Makers report the largest sales they have had in ten years. Dealers say that the market is clear of job lots. Paris manufacturers are busier than they have been in a decade, for the wheel is once more in vogue.

But suppose you haven't a wheel. Of course, that doesn't seem possible.

But in that case you will be glad to know that you can get more for your money than when you bought one ten years ago.

Did you ever enjoy a coaster brake in the old days? Do you know anything about the comfort of modern handle bars, or the late forms of scientifically constructed saddles?

Perhaps you think they stopped improving the bicycle when you gave it up. As a matter of fact, the really big changes for the better have come in with the increased competition due to a temporarily diminishing market. The makers have learned a lot about bearing metals in the last few years and the bicycle has not only absorbed the information, but is a better wheel in every respect, be it in tires, chains, crank hangers, fork crowns or dozens of smaller essentials, than it was in the old days.

So there are reasons enough for any man or woman either. Get out the wheel again, and if its days of usefulness are really over, have a 1907 model at once. You will be in style either way, and your get-health-quick dividends will be amazingly satisfactory.

THE YELLOW CARDS ARE PROMINENT.

A Great Many Cases of Measles in This City and Board of Health Wire Placarding.

The Board of Health report that there was never such an epidemic of measles as prevails about this city at the present time. The epidemic is general, and all parts of the city seem to be affected. For a time the cases were not reported, but the Board of Health recently ordered that all cases should be reported, and now there is a big run on the yellow cards. In the Cabot school alone in the grades and kindergarten, there are forty-seven cases of sickness, the greater number measles.

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC

At the last regular meeting of Local Union, No. 921, Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, it was unanimously decided that on and after June 1, 1907, the journeymen carpenters would insist upon their wages being increased twenty-five cents per day of eight hours over the existing scale, and have so notified the Master Builders' Association of this city.

We feel that we are justly entitled to the advance asked; first, on the ground of the continual increasing cost of living; second, for the reason that we desire a condition nearer that which is accorded to men of our craft in competitive communities; and third, because of the fact (that is very generally admitted) that the carpenter is the poorest paid craftsman of the building trades, when the cost of tools and the ability required is considered.

THE HAND-BITING GILA.

Creature to Be Feared and Avoided Says Writer.

Of some of the strange ways of the gila monster, that little-known creature of the southwestern deserts, a correspondent writes: "I have had some experience with gila monsters and can state that, no matter what scientists may claim, the gila monster is a good thing to shun. Indians and Mexicans have a horror of them and fear them more than a rattlesnake. I believe that the bite of the gila monster is dangerous because of the creature's habit of eating lizards, bugs and rodents, and then lying on sand so hot that it blisters the hands and feet of men. The heat causes the food to putrefy in the stomach, evidenced by the fact that the teeth are often covered with a fermented, putrefied froth from the food. A bite has the same effect as the cut of a dissection knife used on a cadaver; in other words, the inoculation of a deadly poison.

"When frightened or angry he can move quite rapidly. That short, thick, stubby tail is used in jumping. Just as a kangaroo uses his tail, the gila monster bites like a bulldog, and has the tenacity of a snapping turtle. I once saw some men teasing a gila monster brought to Tucson. A string was tied around his neck. The gila monster was crawling around on the ground, trying to get away, but was pulled back by the string. This was carried on till the creature became furious. The crowd around the gila monster knew nothing of his power to spring. Suddenly he sprang up and bit a man among the crowd on the hand, leaping fully two feet from the ground.

"Another instance, this of a man whose chief object seems to have been a foolhardy display of fearlessness. He was holding back one of the monsters in his hand by the back of the neck, so it could not bite him. He dropped his hand to the side of his leg. The gila monster shut his teeth down on his heavy duck overalls, taking a double piece out where the cloth folded, as quickly as a pair of scissors could have cut the fabric and as cleanly.

Retort of Indian Chief.

A distinguished army officer tells a story of himself which relates to the days when he was a young lieutenant in the far west a good many years ago. He was of a party who had gone to see the Indians at Spokane Falls. Among the redskins was Chief Moses, who was fairly well educated and spoke capital English. The young lieutenant addressed Chief Moses in the Indian tongue, saying: "Moses, I have often heard of you and I have seen your picture and your name in the newspapers, but I have never before seen you," and, offering his hand, added: "I am glad to meet you." Moses scanned him from head to foot, and as the young man stood with outstretched hand the lengthening silence and stolidity of the chief were becoming painful when old Moses at last and with great deliberation said in English: "Young man, I have never heard of you before and I have never seen your picture or your name in the newspapers, but," he added lightly, "nevertheless, I am glad to see you," and accepted his hand.

Electricity in the Nursery.

Electricity has invaded the nursery. Within the past few months a device has been patented to rock the youngster's cradle, and the nocturnal pajama promenades are no longer a necessity. So, too, there has recently been placed on the market an electrical baby milk warmer and now when the youngster cries during the night for his food, all that is necessary is to turn a switch and the milk is warm by the time papa is up and has found his slippers. Last but not least comes the startling intelligence, with doubtful significance to bad boys, that an electric spanking machine has been devised. It is predicted that schoolrooms which are already equipped with electric clocks, electric lights, electric tatty bolls, etc., will adopt the new device for youthful chastisement. Heavy soled slippers can be used in place of the paddles if old time associations of childhood are desired.—Electric News Service.

Poets' Themes.

The cynics of our time have whitewashed many of the vices. Poets like the earlier Swinburne practically praised lust as an expression of the love of life. Mr. Rudyard Kipling practically praised cruelty as an expression of the love of life. Poets like Mr. Henley and Mr. John Davidson have practically praised drunkenness, or violence, or obscenity as expressions of the love of life.—C. K. Cheesteron in London Times.

A Financial Lesson.

She—Is it true that when you can get 150 per cent. on an investment it is a shady transaction?

He—My dear, in such fancy returns you violate a rule of good business and of good morals.

She—What is that?

He—Sacrificing your principal for your interest.

Too Roomy.

"Gracious!" exclaimed the economical mother, "I thought I had cut down this old suit of your father's so it would fit you, but it seems entirely too large yet."

"Yes, ma," replied the bright boy, "especially the wide expanse."—The Catholic Standard and Times.

MRS. MCKINLEY BETTER.
Result of illness, however, is in doubt.

Canton, O., May 24.—Dr. Portman, after a call on Mrs. McKinley this morning, issued the following bulletin:
"I have found Mrs. McKinley much better in every way this morning. Her heart action and circulation are better. She rallied enough to ask for a drink of water this morning, but immediately lapsed into unconsciousness."
Dr. Portman added that the result is in doubt, as a relapse may come at any time, and her constitution is such that she can hardly stand a severe attack.

Surgeon General Rixey, accompanied by Secretary Cortelyou, arrived here at 10.11 a. m. They were hurriedly driven to the home of the patient.
At 11.30 a. m., at the McKinley home, after a consultation of doctors, Dr. Rixey gave out the following statement: "Mrs. McKinley's condition is more favorable. We hope and believe that she will improve. Her condition, however, is serious. The principal difficulty is to give sufficient nourishment. There is a decided improvement as to the paralysis, which was limited to one arm."

The motor boat race will be held in the afternoon at high water and the course will be from a stake boat anchored off Walker's wharf to a stake boat in the Narrows, three times around.

In connection with the motor boat racing, there will be a meeting of the motor boat owners of the club with the regatta committee at the club house on Sunday afternoon to discuss handicaps. The question of handicapping the motor boats is bothering the committee, and they are to allow the boat owners to discuss the matter.

RECEIVED INJURIES

Peter S. Holden Hurt in Extinguishing a Fire

Peter S. Holden of the Portsmouth and Portland Express Company, which lately took up new quarters near the forge plant, was badly burned and cut on both hands this (Saturday) forenoon, while extinguishing a fire.

One of the employees of the company had been smoking and left his pipe with burning tobacco in the pocket of his coat, which he hung in a closet with other clothing. As a result, all the clothing in the closet caught fire. Mr. Holden happened to go upstairs and discovered that the closet was wrapped in flames.

In tearing away the woodwork and extinguishing the burning clothing he received severe injuries. He was attended by Dr. F. S. Towle.

A WILD WEST SHOW COMING.

There is a wild west show coming to town, and it is not of the railroad variety. It is known as the Col. Hefenger wild west show, and it will be given to Col. C. Hefenger's yard on

FILLED MANY TIMES.

Mary Persons Have Benefited By The Home "Vegetable Prescription."

That the readers of this paper appreciate advice when given in good faith is plainly demonstrated by the fact that one well-known local pharmacy filled the "vegetable prescription" many times within the past two weeks. Most of these folks naturally bought the ingredients only and mixed them at home. The announcement of this simple, harmless mixture has certainly accomplished much in reducing the great many cases of kidney complaint and rheumatism here, relieving pain and misery, especially among the older population, who are always suffering more or less with bladder and urinary troubles, backache and particularly rheumatism.

Another well-known druggist asks us to continue the announcement of the prescription. It is doing so much real good here, he continues, that it would be a crime not to do so. It can not be repeated too often, and further states many cases of remarkable cures wrought.

The following is the prescription, of vegetable ingredients, making a harmless, inexpensive compound, which any person can prepare by shaking well in a bottle: Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces. Any first class drug store will sell this small amount of each ingredient, and the dose for adults is one teaspoonful to be taken after each meal and again at bedtime. There is enough here to last for one week, if taken according to directions. Good results will be apparent from the first.

Austin street. Lem Pope and Bill Partington are co-partners with Col. Hefenger, and the show promises to be the event of the season. The boys of the Whipple school who have been selected as cowboys and Indians and to do the clown's stunts, are practicing every day. There will be clowns, for even if it is a wild show the boys want a few clowns to improve on Col. Cody. The show will be given some time in June, the date to be announced.

AT THE NAVY YARD

Rev. Fr. William Cavanaugh will hold early services tomorrow, Trinity Sunday, on the prison ship Southery, followed later in the day by the regular service, conducted by Chaplain Frank Thompson.

Joseph T. Walte, shipfitters' helper, and Thomas H. Shaw, painter, in the construction and repair department, have returned from sick leaves.

Kim Egekam, cabin cook on the U. S. S. Southery, was today (Saturday) transferred to the receiving ship Wabash at Boston.

Today (Saturday) 240 new tubes arrived for the Southery's boiler, which will shortly be repaired.

Uncle Sam handed out considerable money at this yard and station today (Saturday), when the regular mechanics and laborers received their pay, also the crews of the tugs Uncas and Nezinecof and the prison ship Southery.

The brick work on the new boiler shop was started with a rush today (Saturday) on the arrival of the window frames, which have been delayed on account of the strike of the carpenters in Boston.

Growing Old.

It is ten p. m. They are seated in the parlor. "No," she says, bowing her head. "Pa says I am too young to become engaged." It is just 1.30 a. m. They are still seated in the parlor. Suddenly, from somewhere upstairs, a gruff voice shouts. "Henrietta, if that fellow waits a little longer you'll be old enough to accept his proposal!"—Woman's Home Companion.

Latson on Walking.

Dr. Latson says: "A correct walk is the rarest accomplishment I can think of. Handsome faces are rare, good figures are much more rare; but as to gait and carriage, out of 500 we shall find 30 or 40 handsome faces, and perhaps a dozen good figures. But certainly in that number we shall rarely find more than one or two people who walk properly."

Great Laughters.

The plant laughers have been men—Shakespeare and Rabelais. I do not regard Cervantes and Sterne as laughers. They are smilers. They are not jolly roasters and guffawers. They are not fat, rotund, jovial hilarities. They are thin, lean, ironic smiles. A smile is a diluted laugh. Sterne is a diluted Rabelais.—James Douglas, in M. A. Y.

SAILORS HAVE ODD BELIEFS.

Good and Bad Luck—Thought to Be Brought by Birds.

Birds, as inhabitants of the air, were naturally chosen by the ancients as oracles and augurs of future happenings. The sensitiveness to atmospheric changes shown by many birds aided in establishing these notions. The real indications often furnished by sea birds of a coming storm or calm were doubtless magnified by the anxious, superstitious sailor. These indications, be it explained, seldom preceded the atmospheric changes more than a few hours.

The custom of hanging the sea swallow so that the bill may point to the wind arose from the old-time custom of suspending the bird by the feet, expecting it would renew its feathers as it alive.

The albatross is believed by Jack Tar to sleep on the winds. It was at one time thought that the petrel hatched its eggs under its wings.

The kingfisher was at one time kept in chests to keep away moths.

The fishhawk was esteemed a bringer of good luck; it boded good or evil as its cry was to the right or left.

There was an old superstition that gulls were never seen bleeding. Shooting stars were then supposed to be the half digested food of winter gulls.

Peat Beds in Minnesota.

Peat bricks, regarded in many quarters as the coming fuel of the northwest, may be manufactured in St. Peter, Minn., if the plans of a number of local men mature. They are interesting themselves in the project and have engaged an expert, Bernard C. Stiz, of Cincinnati, O., to analyze samples of peat taken from marshes near this city. If it can be shown that the peat is of good quality they intend to organize a company with home capital, erect a factory, and develop the bogs.

Nicollet county peats deposits are regarded as among the richest in the state. They are found principally near Swan and Timber lakes, and extend over several hundred acres. The peat in them is from ten to 12 feet in depth, and it is claimed that the supply is practically inexhaustible. There is a smaller bog near this city, but the peat is not of as good quality as that taken from the marshes near Oshawa, from the fact that the bog once formed the bed of the Minnesota river and that the formation contains quite a heavy percentage of sand.—Minneapolis Journal.

DELLA'S TWENTY-FIFTH BIRTHDAY

By Gertrude De S. Wentworth-James

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

June 1, 11 a. m.—It is five years today since I even opened my Birthday Diary.

At first—after it was all over—I couldn't bear to see or to touch the little book; then when that feeling had dulled, I forgot all about it.

But this morning, I came across the volume which holds the flamboyant fancies from 17 to 20; and a mood had seized me that after five years I will again turn to my paper confidant.

"Poor little book! you are faded and yellow on the margins like your writer—the worse for wear! From 17 to 25 is a long, long while!"

Who could help growing the worse for wear?

I don't suppose that many jilted women of 25 can smile with perpetual success!

Jilted!

It is a marvelously ugly word to write; but as a Birthday Diary demands the truth, I may not scratch it out.

Yes, at 20 I loved madly, riotously, and wonderfully—oh, God! how full of real romance I was!—and at 21 I had to teach myself to leave off loving!

I didn't think I should ever learn the lesson; but I suppose I have—now. I almost wish now that I had entered in the Birthday Diary how my lover gave me up. There was nothing particularly original about the proceeding or the way it was done, but for all that it was worth remembering.

It was after dinner. I was sitting in my boudoir waiting for him instead of going to the theater with the others, because he had wired that he wanted to see me alone.

"That wire had made me so happy."

"It is because he just wants to 'sit with his arms around me,' he said, 'quite by himself.' I thought with glad conceit as I got into his favorite gown."

With curious punctuality (he was usually late on every occasion) George arrived. His mouth looked straight and set, as he entered the room, but when it was pressed against my own in the most passionate greeting he had ever given me, I forgot its almost cruel lines.

When I had drawn back after that swift, spontaneous kiss, George did not make any effort to come near me again.

"I have come to tell you," he began, looking more Napoleonic than I had ever seen him—"I have come to say, Della, that my people want me—to marry—a woman—with a great deal more money than you—will—ever—have. I had better confess it all, and—"

Oh! it's no good writing down the early history of debt and difficulty, the mercenary edicts of a snobbish family circle of generals, admirals, ungodly, and self-importance, and the pitiful, cowardly weakness of a man with a firm jaw and Napoleonic profile!

Details are nothing; it's only results that matter, and the results are in my heart and on my feet.

This morning when I woke I looked to the glass, just as I looked on the day I began my Birthday Diary—eight years ago!

At first there didn't seem to be much difference; but by a gradually I understood why my only friends are clever, snobbish or sensible married women, and my only admirers, lively, cultured or prudent people who would be likely to study insurance propositions.

A "woman" of five-and-twenty! I remember how I used to rave in the "woman" world—was young enough for it to be absurd when applied to myself; but now, oh! I'd give anything if people would only occasionally call me a "girl!"

It seems ages since I was called a "girl" by anyone except mamma (she of course will call me one when I'm 90). I am always a "nice little woman," a "clever woman like yourself," "you who are such a charming woman," etc.

I don't want to be a woman—not "nice," "clever," nor "charming!" I'd give all my reputation for saying smart things, being accomplished and well-read, and for dressing well, I could just as well, vain, shy, arrogant "girl" again.

But no—"You're a sweet-scented pansy!" has been used for me.

I am 25—I am "clever"—I am lonely—I am admired—I am unloved!

And even Doll (the boy-lover who has faithfully remembered my birthdays all these years) forgets me now.

To-day is the first time since we said good-by on my seveneenth birthday that no gift has arrived from the blazing east.

I expect I shall hear by the next mail that he has taken unto himself a wife—some young, fresh-skinned thing sent straight over from home in order to test the Anglo-Indian marriage market before she runs the gamut of expensive London seasons.

Poor Doll! He was full of all a boy's passionate fidelity.

"I shall never, never forget you or leave off loving you all my life!"

Sometimes I can hear those words as he said them that wonderful June 1, just eight years ago, when I was full of child-girlhood's arrogance.

Perhaps that—oh! here comes some one to break my solitude! Cannot they leave me alone with my birthday thoughts?

6 p. m.—Although I never believed that this birthday entry would divide itself into two halves, like some of the others, nevertheless, it has done so.

I began my diary on the river—I conclude it in the bedroom (such a tiny bungalow bedroom, where my dinner frock is laid out ready).

The "some one" who came through the trees to break the solitude of my birthday thoughts was—Doll!

The boy-lover, bronzed and grown into a strong, almost stern-looking man.

"I thought I would bring your present myself this year, Della," were his first words, as he stepped into the punt and dropped a packet into my lap.

In a strange, inexplicable way I wasn't surprised to see him; it almost seemed as though the water and the wind and the birds had prepared me for his coming.

"I—thought you had f-forgotten me this year," I stammered, tearing the string and paper off the packet.

"I told you eight years ago that I should never, never forget you," he answered quietly, as I raised the lid of a small cardboard box, and—

"There was my birthday gift!"

Another gold heart—just like the one he had given me when I was 17!

"I have come home to give you my heart over again. Will you take it this time, Della?"

Then I realized that there are some men who "never forget"—and thank God for them!

"But, Doll, I have changed so much—let me move into the sunlight here, so that you can really see my face; and remember, I powder—now!"

No, no, you must hear me! I have loved some one very much, and— and he gave me up. (Jilted me, Doll!) You will be only taking theavings of another man; you can't want me—Doll, you can't want me!"

With a tender smile on his face, Doll took both my hands in his.

"Yes, dear, I can want you, and I do want you," he answered; "I have wanted you all these years—lonely, blazing years, Della; and in my own way I've been praying all the time that some day we might be together."

A sudden feeling of resentment rushed over me (perhaps his prayers had been responsible for my being loved—and left); but then as I saw the great honesty of his eyes, nothing but thankfulness and humility remained in my heart.

"If you really mean it, Doll, I—I am ready; but it is a right for a man to pick up broken threads after eight years," I said.

"It is no risk, because, with me, the threads have never been dropped."

Then he bent down and kissed my hand.

Now the second gold heart (I lost the first one years ago!) is hanging round my neck, and everyone knows we are going to be married.

We have been up to the houseboat, and Erica has kissed and cried over us both, and mamma is so happy, too.

Everyone seems happy, and—surely it can't be true—but is it that I am happy as well?

It would be wonderful if it were so, but I sit opposite the glass as I write it almost looks like it.

I caught myself smiling without knowing it, and the smile has taken away that long line; I'll put on my white frock and—why, to-night I believe I can bear to wear roses!

And there is Doll, he is calling to me from the garden below.

"When are you coming down, you vain little girl!"

"Vain little girl!"—girl—girl!

Not "clever woman"—but just "vain little girl!"

At last I have come back to my heart—yes, I am 25—but some one has called me a "girl!"

It is very dear to be loved, and my thankfulness is great.

Please God, the future will be all right—I think it will!

Where are the roses? I'll put one in my hair, and a cluster on my breast.

Yes, Doll, I am coming! A little girl!

THE SPARROWS' HOUSE

By JOSEPH BAUGHNER

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

There was absolutely no reason why we should move; we were living in an up-to-date house in an excellent neighborhood. But Alice, my wife, thought differently, and as she was bent upon making a change, I consented on condition that she should do her own house-hunting.

"Oh, James!" she cried, as she met me one evening with a five-year lease in her hand. "I've found such a charming little home, and in such a delightful location; it's so cultured, and refined, you know. I am so glad on Henry Jr.'s account, for you know that Henry Jr. is getting on."

The youth referred to had not turned 14 months.

"I leased the house from a Miss Sparrow—such a superior woman!" continued my wife; "so much nicer, don't you think, than renting from those horrid agents who will never do a thing for one without making a fuss about it. Miss Sparrow says she couldn't think of giving us so charming a little home, but her sister Amy is to be married next month, poor girl! and she, Miss Sparrow, of course, doesn't care to live alone."

I offered no objections, but suggested that she should write to her Uncle Henry, for whom Henry Jr. was named, and request him to postpone his visit until we were thoroughly settled in our new home. She indignantly refused, saying that her uncle had grown very irritable and suspicious of late, and he might think we didn't want him, and that she wasn't going to have Henry Jr.'s prospects ruined by any such insane notions. My wife's uncle, an asthmatic, wealthy old bachelor, was strongly prejudiced against me, because his niece had married me when he had hoped she would nurse him in his declining years.

The night of the first of the following month found us in our new home, and excepting that a shower of prisms fell from the parlor chandelier when I lighted the gas, the evening had, so far, passed off without incident.

My wife's uncle arrived in the worst of humors; his train, being three hours late, didn't pull in until almost midnight. He drew back from the suspiciously when I offered to take his valise, and glared at me savagely over his glasses, thoroughly convinced, no doubt, that to a conspiracy on my part was due the accident to his train.

My wife, not a little hurt when her effusive greeting met with a rebuff, said she was sorry little Henry had gone to bed, for she would so like to have her uncle Henry see his little namesake. Whereupon he, somewhat gruffly inquired whether Henry Jr. had any intention of absconding before morning.

Crestfallen, and worn out after a hard day's work we went to bed, but I had hardly closed my eyes when I felt myself suddenly aroused.

"James," whispered my wife, in trembling tones, "what is that noise?"

"Only water running next door," I replied drowsily, and turned over to sleep again.

"Water next door! Why, James, it's in this very room. Listen!"

I got up and plainly heard the sound, but couldn't locate it.

Hoping to find the source of the noise, I ran a lighted wax taper along the side of the wall; when I reached a point about three feet from the window I found it as a volume of flame belched forth almost to the opposite side of the room. I seized a pillow, and called to my wife for a cork.

"Take it away, for the love of heaven!" I yelled, as she handed me a cork, holding in her other hand a bottle. "It's gasoline!"

She gave a piercing shriek, and threw the bottle and cork into the hall. After knocking over several things in the medicine chest she gave me a rubber stopper. I drove it into the aperture of a gas pipe from which the bracket had been perched by the Sparrows, and which they had plugged with wax. The pillow, in the meantime had caught fire, and while I was trying to smother it my wife screamed again, and this time Henry Jr., who joined in the angle, this brought down my wife's uncle, whom we didn't see until I lighted the gas, although he had announced himself by a sneeze.

Finally I got things quieted. I didn't notice until the next morning how badly I had been burned. It was after dawn when I was awakened.

"James! get up, quick!" called my wife. "The room is filled with smoke—the house is on fire!"

Almost suffocated, I jumped out of bed, threw open windows, and groped my way to the kitchen stairs.

"Phyllis!" I yelled at the top of my voice; "is there a fire down there?"

"No, sah," yelled back the cook; "dar ain't no fire; I wish dar war, but it's all smoke. Dar de ole stove! It won't draw. An' Mrs. Jeems, dar's a man head w'll go, an' he done turn de watch off in de alley, kase he say de wahsh rin ain't paid, an' how 's ter get breakins wifout no flah an' no wahsh, de good Lord. He only know."

We hurriedly dressed, while Henry Jr., having awakened, entered into the spirit of the affair, and seemed to enjoy it, for he persisted in kicking his heels up into the air and throwing off his covering. We tied his feet in his cradle, and then ran down to the kitchen, where we found Phyllis in tears.

"It are only de smoke, Miss Alice," explained the cook, drawing her sleeve across her eyes, while my wife, the picture of misery, was genuinely crying.

"There are draughts all over this house," she said, shivering as she drew her shawl around her.

"Dar ain't no draughts in dis heah ole stove, Miss Alice, 'deed dar ain't," said Phyllis, fanning the grate with her apron.

"Never mind the grate, Phyllis," said my wife, "but make a fire at once in the parlor. The little precious upstairs will take his death of cold." And she went to Henry Jr., leaving me gazing dolefully through a broken window out on the rain-soaked, ash-covered landscape of the Sparrows' back yard.

I was brought back to myself by my wife calling me to come up and unrobe Henry Jr., who was strenuously objecting to his bondage. Just as I had freed him, there came from below an awful crash.

"Bress mah soul!" wailed Phyllis from the parlor, "if de wahle front winder of de pariah stove ain't done fall out!"

I ran down again, followed by my wife with Henry Jr. in her arms.

"This is the last straw," I muttered, looking on our new parlor carpet, ruined forever.

"Where are you going, James?" said my wife, as I was getting into my rain coat.

"I'm going, my dear," I replied, "to call, as early as it is, upon that Sparrow of yours, and twist its neck."

"I beg of you—I implore you not to go, James. Miss Sparrow will attend to everything. I am sure; besides, poor Miss Amy is going to be married only next month, and—"

Before she had time to finish her uncle entered and startled us with a double sneeze.

"Oh, Uncle Henry!" cried my wife, in great distress, "I knew you would take cold last night. You must let me get you something. I'm sure you must feel very bad; I will—"

"You may make yourself easy on that point, madam," he broke in. "But before I leave this house of conspirators I want to advise you to place that child in an asylum where he will be properly cared for, while you, madam, should be confined in some sanitarium. And as for you, sir," he shouted, shaking his umbrella in my face, "take the gold cure—the pledge would do you no good, you'd only break it. Take the gold cure! the gold cure! the gold cure!" He slammed the front door after him, and shuffled down the street.

While conning these things, Phyllis came in with her settle for a last load. She told us she had found an oil stove with enough oil in it to cook breakfast. She hesitated as she added that she had borrowed some water from our neighbor next door, who remarked that we had begun the borrowing plan rather early for so short an acquaintance. We commended our cook's enterprise and told her to do the best she could. And for the next ten minutes we heard her in terms forcible, if not polite, pay her respects to the stove.

Breakfast was not a success. The coffee was cold, and the chops were garnished with coal oil, the flavor of which lingered with me for hours.

Directly after breakfast I called on the Sparrows, who, while making my complaints, did nothing but flutter and chirp. The elder bird said she couldn't afford to spend a cent at that time on repairs.

I notified her that we would vacate the house within three days.

She fluttered and chirped excitedly as they followed me to the door, and I thought I heard the betrothed Sparrow say something about damages, though it may have been nothing more than an offensive twitter.

After calling on my old agent, I turned my steps toward our "new home," where I met the stove man who was, for the moment, leaving. He told me that he had fixed the parlor stove, but could do nothing with the kitchen range; that during the summer months the sparrows must have built their nests in the chimney. I told him that I hadn't the slightest doubt about it.

My wife was anxiously awaiting my return. I told her of my highly satisfactory visit to our old landlord.

"Poor Miss Amy!" moaned my wife. "And, oh! you poor, disinherited, defrauded little darling," she added, burying her face in Henry Jr.'s neck.

On the evening of the third day following we were back in our old home.

Last year there were 39,211,000 of matches sold in France, bringing into that nation's treasury $5,216,150, this being a state monopoly.

The Hero Who Ran Away

By J. S. FLETCHER

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

When the afternoon express finally rolled into the Gare du Nord at seven o'clock of an April evening, Maxwell left the train with a sigh of immense relief. He was in Paris, and in Paris he could breathe and think, and perhaps make up his mind as to what was to be done at the present crisis of his life.

"Anyway, I am freed from the great, overwhelming temptation of her presence," he thought, as he walked moodily about the flower-scented streets. "A man gets so little chance of thinking clearly in a woman's presence, or if she is within easy distance of him. If I'm going to fight this thing out it must be away from her. She—"

Maxwell stopped suddenly—thought and step alike came to a summary conclusion. He was dimly conscious that he stood at the corner of the Rue Royale, and that he was shaking hands with his friend Lady Ravensrode, from whom in some vague fashion the spring morning had suddenly borrowed new charm of light, shade, color and scent.

"Major Maxwell!" she exclaimed. "But why should one be surprised? Paris is so very much next-door nowadays. Let me see—it was night before last that we met, wasn't it?"

"I think so," said Maxwell. "I came over yesterday—Dover and Calais, you know—on business."

"I came over yesterday, too," said Lady Ravensrode. "Folkstone and Boulogne, you know—also on business. My business is—frocks."

Maxwell stroked his mustache. He became conscious of the presence of Lady Ravensrode's maid, hovering at a discreet distance; also of the interest which was being created in the minds and eyes of the passers-by, who glanced at the English woman's graceful figure, copper-gold hair, and vivacious beauty, with unmistakable admiration. He looked at Lady Ravensrode, first furtively, then with a curious determination in his bronzed face.

"Send your maid away," he said. "The frocks, I am sure, can wait a little. I—I want to talk to you. The fact is, I'm in a bit—no, I mean a good deal—of a hole, and I want your advice."

Lady Ravensrode obeyed this peremptory order without a murmur.

"They sat down on a rustic seat under the refreshing shade trees of the Champs Elysees."

Maxwell began tracing strange shapes in the gravel at his feet; he knitted his brow and pursed up his lips, and Lady Ravensrode watched him with a tiny smile at the corners of her mouth. Presently he looked up, regarded her with a stony stare, and said:

"The fact is that I've run away."

"Run away? With whom?"

"That," said Maxwell, "is feminine, but silly. I ran away to think."

"Oh," she said, blankly.

"Well, I'll tell you the truth," he said, "I'm running away from a woman."

"That," she replied, "is exactly what I should expect of you."

He looked quickly and suspiciously at her.

"Ah!" he exclaimed. "Then you do think me a coward?"

"I didn't say so," she said. "Is she pretty?"

Maxwell raised his eyes and stared at her.

"Pretty?" he said. "She—why, she is the most beautiful woman in the world!"

The honesty and simplicity of his tone were so evident that her inquiring eyes dropped before his.

"She is to be congratulated that you are so fond of her," she said, softly.

"Ah, but then, she doesn't know," he answered. "The thing is—ought I to tell her? That's what I want to know. That's the question I want to decide. Oh, I'm a horrible coward about it."

"If you love her," said Lady Ravensrode, "you certainly ought to tell her of your love for her. It's wrong not to; it's wicked."

"Wrong? Wicked? Why?" he demanded, with signs of great surprise.

Lady Ravensrode turned her face toward him and studied him with dancing eyes and a tightly-closed mouth. (Maxwell frowned still more gloomily.)

"Why do you look at me like that?" he asked. "I know you're laughing at me, right away down in your heart, and I want to know why. You see, sometimes I think 'John Maxwell, you'll be the luckiest man on earth if you can win her—try your best!' But again I think: 'Nonsense, don't make a fool of yourself, and—'"

Lady Ravensrode interrupted him quickly.

"What, by marrying her?" she said. "Good heavens, no!" answered Maxwell. "No, but by

DECISIONS HANDED DOWN

Several decisions in superior court cases have been handed down by Judge Wallace at Exeter. In the case of John E. Chase, Frank A. Barker and Gilbert A. Thompson, supervisors of Stratham, the decision is plaintiff satisfied. In a suit of Charles G. Marston of Hampton against Bernard P. Hoffman of Portsmouth for house rent, the plaintiff was awarded twelve dollars.

UNION OF CHURCHES

Strongly Urged In Letter Of
Rev. Geo. W. Gile

REASONS ARE GIVEN FOR UNITY
OF EFFORT

That there is keen interest in this city in the movement for church union is shown by the following letter, addressed to the members of the Pearl Street Baptist Church, by Rev. George W. Gile, pastor of the Middle Street Baptist Church.

Portsmouth, N. H.,
May 8, 1907.

To the Deacons, Officers and Members of the Free Baptist Church, Portsmouth, N. H.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:

I learn by our Portsmouth papers that you are soon to be without a pastor and I take the liberty on behalf of our New Hampshire inter-denominational commission to suggest the wisdom of a reunion of the Baptist family of our old and honored city. A little more than 100 years ago, the first Baptist church of Portsmouth was organized. It was recognized by a council of Baptist brethren from neighboring Baptist churches. The acting pastor of the church was an ordained Baptist minister, but after a while divisions and discussions came on account of differences in doctrine and church policy and as the result of these differences we have had, for the past eighty-one years, two Baptist churches, and for seventy-two years, three Baptist churches, where one church would have been quite sufficient for the religious demands of our city.

The extra cost of maintaining these churches has been a heavy and unnecessary burden upon the Baptist family. We are now living at a time when these differences, however intelligently and sincerely held, are no bar to a united church membership. We honor the fathers for their fidelity to truth, but we recognize the fact that a larger intelligence in the interpretation of truth has modified very materially the demands that are made upon us. The three Baptist churches of Portsmouth have a total membership of 505; a Sunday school enrollment of 470; an average congregation on the Sabbath of 355, and a seating capacity in the three meeting houses of 1,350.

In these days, when the struggle in our city is for purity and righteousness in domestic, business and political life, when so much depends upon keeping Christianity Christian in our own country, and such earnest appeals are constantly coming for missionaries of the cross to enter and enlighten the dark places of the earth, is it wise or Christian to perpetuate differences and mistakes, that involve a waste of money and raise barriers in the way of Heaven's answer to the prayer of our Lord and Master?

In behalf of the New Hampshire Inter-Denominational Commission, in which your denomination bears an honorable part, I submit these things for your prayerful and serious consideration.

Yours very sincerely,
GEORGE W. GILE,
Member of the Commission.

SCHOOLS WILL CLOSE

Because Of The Prevalence Of Measles
In This City

The Spaulding and Cabot schools and the lower four grades of the Whipple and Farragut schools are to be closed by order of the board of instruction. The prevalence of measles in this city is the reason for the action and the schools will remain closed for, at least, ten days.

The decision was reached at a special meeting of the board of instruction held this forenoon.

There are about 300 cases of measles in this city.

LINCOLN CLUB TO BE DISBANDED

The Lincoln Republican Club is to be disbanded. There will be a meeting this afternoon at the home of Winston Churchill in Cornish, at which the organization of a new reform political body will be discussed.

GOOD THING FOR PASSENGERS

The Portsmouth street railway has arranged for cars going both ways on the Christian Shore loop to go in on the spur track near the railroad station on Deer street, to take and leave passengers for all trains.

AS A HERALD MAN SEES IT.

It is understood that the veteran firemen are doing exceedingly well in the matter of funds for the muster to be held here in August and everything points to success, as far as public subscriptions are concerned. The necessary is pretty sure to be forthcoming. There are no official figures ready as yet, but the soliciting committees from the board of trade, the Merchants' Exchange and the Franklin Pierce Association are decidedly pleased with the result of the work so far.

People who have occasion to pass along Vaughan street almost any morning early are usually treated to an exhibition of animal intelligence that forces them to stop. The animal is a white horse, owned by Burpee Wood. This horse has things his own way at the stable and certainly deserves to be a privileged character. He does not depend on the regular feed served out to him with the other horses, for he has friends all over the neighborhood and they look for him nearly every day. His first trip in the morning is down to Freeman's bakery, where he takes full possession of the sidewalk and calls for his doughnut. If the people in the shop are too busy to give him his customary handout he will go in and get it and save the proprietor or clerk the trouble of bringing it out to him. He will then make other calls, where apples and candy are served from the hands of ladies who look for him as if he were a member of the household.

Over in the county jail, under the eye of Sheriff Collis, are two men, probably among the best known in the county, George A. Waugh and G. B. Brown, both of Derry, where they have been in business nearly twenty years. Waugh is the owner and proprietor of a flourishing hotel in that town and Brown conducts a prosperous livery business. They were both sentenced by Judge Wallace for selling liquor and besides serving thirty days here they were ordered to pay fines.

A few days ago, a Herald reporter had occasion to visit the jail and while there had a very interesting conversation with the two men. It appears that Waugh and Brown were never inside of a prison of any kind before and when they received their sentences to serve thirty days in jail they nearly fainted. They told the reporter that they had to get over it and are now getting hardened to the jail life, though they have only a short time to stay. "You can say," said Waugh, "that when we sell any more liquor it will be in a legitimate way. We are being well treated here, but we don't get all the comforts of home."

"Who looks after your business while you are confined here?" asked the reporter. With a smile, Waugh replied: "We have two good smart wives and they are handling the business in good shape until we get our release on Decoration day." Both men have plenty of money and their meals are sent in every day from a restaurant, which is not objected to by the authorities, as long as the men have the stuff to pay for it.

Hack drivers are feeling pretty good over the recent law passed in this state in their behalf. They say that such a law has been needed for some time. You can't dodge them any longer, as they can get satisfaction in the courts. The new law is as follows: "Section 1. If any person, with intent to cheat or defraud, shall procure the transportation of himself, or of other persons, or of personal baggage or effects, by any hackman, carriage driver or expressman, without paying therefor, he shall be fined not exceeding twenty dollars, or be imprisoned not exceeding three months."

There is another law which will be of much interest to milk consumers as well as the milk dealers regarding the cleaning of cans, jars and other receptacles for milk. This law reads as follows: "Section 1. No person company or corporation shall, furnish or provide any can, or other receptacle, used for the purpose of transporting milk or cream, unless said can, or other receptacle, and the cover or stopper thereto be thoroughly cleaned by the use of hot water or steam, or both hot water and steam, before said can, or other receptacle, is delivered to the person who is to fill the same. Section 2. Any person violating the terms of this act shall be fined the sum of five dollars for each can, or other receptacle furnished, in accordance with section 1."

HISTORIC TRAIN

Likely to be Discontinued on Boston and Maine System

It is rumored that among the changes to occur on the Boston and Maine railroad on June 10 will be the discontinuance of the 8.45 morning freight train, from Portsmouth to Sanbornville. This change will probably be more noticeable than any that has occurred in years in the train service, dating back to the days of the old Eastern railroad.

For thirty-four years this train has departed every week day from Portsmouth at a quarter to nine, during which time it has had only four conductors.

The first was J. E. Applebee, who met his death while doing duty on that train. The second was Jeremiah J. Goodwin of Portsmouth, the third G. Fred Mathes of Dover and the last and present conductor Herbert Colbath. Four better railroad men the system never knew, men held in high regard both by the railroad officials and the traveling public.

Another peculiar fact connected with this train is that during all these years it has only carried three numbers 117, 239 and 857. Nearly every man in the train service of the old Conway branch has seen service in one way or another on this train.

ENTERTAIN BRETHREN

Strawberry Bank Encampment The Host On Friday Evening

The Harmony Encampment of I. O. O. F. of Amesbury were the guests on Friday evening of Strawberry Bank, I. O. O. F., and they were royally entertained by the local brethren. The visitors came here on a special train and arrived at 7.30, and they were met at the depot by the members of the Strawberry Bank encampment and, headed by a drum corps with William Betton leader, marched about the city to Odd Fellows' Hall. Each of the marchers was provided with a little red fire and the procession was quite imposing.

At the hall the second degree was conferred by the degree team of the visiting encampment, and it was fine work. There were forty-five members in the team and the floor work was exceptionally good.

Following the work, adjournment was taken to the upper hall, where a fine salad supper was served and a general good time enjoyed. The visitors left for their home on the special train after midnight.

PAYING THEIR FARE

State officials who are forbidden to use passes and who are allowed traveling expenses by the state have, it is said, been paying full fare over the Boston and Maine railroad lines since May 15. Gov. Floyd, however, is authority for the statement that a contract will soon be signed with the railroad officials and special tickets issued.

The Herald was misinformed on Friday regarding the sale of the tenement house on Green street to Suggen Brothers and gladly makes the correction in behalf of the Scott estate, which is still in possession of the property reported to have been sold.

ROOSEVELT AND THE NATURE WRITERS

President Roosevelt in an interview, today, replies to the President and defends himself against the charge of fakery.

It happens that we have never had an opportunity to observe beasts in their native wilds to any great extent and we cannot, therefore, attempt to say which of the distinguished gentlemen engaged in the present controversy is right. We do know, however, that Mr. Roosevelt is not the pioneer in this crusade. John Burroughs, himself a distinguished naturalist, has before expressed his opinion of some of the men who are giving the public information regarding the lives and habits of our four-footed brothers. We have an affection for Mr. Burroughs strengthened by long acquaintance with his delightful writings and a confidence in him which, so far as we know, has never been abused. Naturally, we are more inclined to accept his statements than those whom we know less well.

It has always seemed to us that some of the stories of animal intelligence told by the nature writers of the present day were a bit extravagant. We found it hard to believe that the four-footed denizens of the wild were possessed of actual powers of reasoning and in no other way could the tales told of them be explained. Wild animals met by the gentlemen who have been filling the magazines with stories of wonderful beasts must be very different from the animals encountered by the ordinary man.

We know that trained animals in circuses do very remarkable things, but none of these educated beasts has accomplished feats to equal those ascribed to the animal heroes of some of the popular natural history books of the era. All of these things may be true, of course. We do not say that they are not, but we are inclined to acknowledge our relationship to the gentleman from Missouri, and express a desire to be shown.

OUR EXCHANGES

The Moonshine Stills of Georgia
 The moonshine stills of Georgia—
 I see them in my dreams,
 The bright head dancing on the corn
 There, in the pale moonbeams,
 Where the raccoon hunts the hollow
 And shrill the night owl screams.

The moonshine stills of Georgia,
 Hid by the mountain wall;
 I see the brown jug on the stump—
 The corn-cob cork, and all;
 And I glide there, like a shadow,
 At a low, keen whistle's call.

O, moonshine still of Georgia!
 Though far away I roam,
 Sweet scents of peace and honey
 Come o'er the hills of home!
 And the rattlesnake and screech owl,
 They call me—and I come.

JUDGE ON TRIAL

On Charge Of Killing Young Man

SAID TO HAVE WRONGED HIS DAUGHTER

Sensational Evidence, According To Reports, Will Be Offered

FAMILY OF DEAD YOUTH CONVINCED OF HIS INNOCENCE

Richmond, Va., May 27.—The case of ex-Judge William G. Loving, charged with the murder of Theodore Estes, whom Judge Loving accused of having drugged and wronged his young daughter, Elizabeth, while out driving, will be called before the term of the circuit court to convene in Nelson county today. Owing to the fact that he entire county has been deeply stirred by the sensational case, it is likely that a change of venue will be asked for and if granted the trial will probably be transferred to Petersburg or to this city. If current stories amount to anything the trial will prove one of the biggest sensations ever recorded in the judicial annals of Virginia.

All of Nelson county appears to have arrayed itself on the one side or the other of the famous case. Many openly uphold Judge Loving in carrying out the unwritten law, while others are inclined to think he acted too hastily and blame him for not giving his victim a chance to explain, if any explanation were possible.

It is reported that the trial will bring to light many startling things heretofore unknown and bearing directly upon the tragedy, among others that it will be shown that Estes, on at least two previous occasions, had made similar attempts to drug girls with liquor. On one of these occasions, it is said, the intended victim threatened to inform her father if Estes did not desist in his persecution, which threat had the desired effect. The young lady, it is stated, will be placed on the witness stand by the defense. It is held that the production of evidence that Estes had on previous occasions offered girls liquor, coupled with the fact that Judge Loving waited until the day after the alleged occurrence and after both he and his wife had talked with their daughter before hunting for and killing Estes, will have weight in favor of the former jurist.

The Estes family, on the other hand are firm in their belief in the innocence of young Estes of the alleged wrongdoing and are preparing to make vigorous effort to convict Judge Loving of the murder. The family has engaged Daniel Harmon of Charlottesville, one of the ablest lawyers of the state, to assist in the prosecution. Judge Loving himself has engaged eminent counsel in the persons of John L. Lee of Lynchburg, and W. Walton Moore of Fairfax, who will assist Andrew E. Strade, the personal counsel of Judge Loving.

Shoe Machinery Company Likely to Move From Massachusetts

Rumors are flying fast in Massachusetts to the effect that the bill aimed at the United Shoe Machinery Company may lead that company to consider the matter of doing business in some other state. It is understood that New Hampshire would be favored.

Portsmouth is the only place for the company, should it make a move of this kind, as we have just what is wanted most, a water front suitable for receiving and shipping by water and especially suitable for the handling of coal for the company.

The board of trade is looking into the matter.

CITY BRIEFS

It is almost time for the new directory.

York's literary colony receives additions every year.

Have your shoes repaired by John Mott, 34 Congress street.

Ringling's circus certainly should visit Portsmouth this year.

The cold weather has had no terrors for the early summer visitors.

Many people from this city have inspected Elliot's new public library building.

Portsmouth baseball players are doing good work with the teams of other cities.

The Fourth of July road race will be a novel and pleasing athletic event for this city.

Reports from York are that fewer new cottages than usual are being built this year.

Kittery is decidedly pleased that it is not to lose William Dean Howells as a summer resident.

The recent cut in the insurance policies on the city property was not enjoyed by the insurance agent.

This is the week that the graves in all of the cemeteries receive attention in preparation for Memorial day.

Several of the Portsmouth fresh water fishermen are to try their luck in the brooks and lakes this week.

Water Commissioner S. F. A. Pickering attended his first meeting of the commission on Saturday evening.

Hendri L. Bates, eyesight specialist, eyes examined free; new styles, I can save you one-half in prices.

Mrs. Hunt will render a charming set of exquisite flower songs at Mrs. Brackett's concert next Wednesday evening.

There should be some exciting motor boat races during the summer, as many of the boats on the Piscataqua are reputed to be very fast.

The U. S. S. Newport it is understood, will be taken by the Massachusetts Naval Militia for this season's cruise. The ship is practically ready for sea.

Mrs. Brackett's concert on Wednesday evening will not begin until 8.15, thus accommodating out-of-town patrons or those who use the local trolley lines.

Dartmouth easily won the New England Intercollegiate Athletic Association championship on Saturday at Worcester, when she won 47 points to Brown's 28½, the latter being her nearest competitor. The Green track team made a fine showing this season.

The largest stock and lowest prices for monuments as we do not have the expense of agents and customers get the discount. John H. Dowd, Market street.

Carl Busch, who gave an exhibition of wrestling in this city a short time ago, was defeated in Lowell on Friday night, when he was thrown by a stranger named Pearson of Washington state. Pearson took the place of another wrestler, but he proved to be a clever man.

Councilman Ward, with Street Commissioner Ridge, escorted several members of the city council about the city on Sunday forenoon on a tour of inspection. Mr. Ward's big automobile was used and several places that the street commissioner wanted the members to look at were visited.

Memorial Day promises to be a strenuous day for athletic sports. There will be two baseball games in Kittery, an athletic meet under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. at the Plains, the opening of the Kittery Yacht Club and motor boat races, the sailing regatta of the Portsmouth Yacht club in the forenoon, and the motor boat races in the afternoon and a golf tournament at the Country Club.

TOOK SWEET REVENGE

Portsmouth Easily Won From
Rochester HighSCORED ELEVEN TO TWO VICTORY
ON SATURDAY

Portsmouth High school's baseball team took sweet revenge on Rochester High on Saturday for the defeat administered on Fast Day in the latter city, putting it all over the boys from Strafford county by a score of eleven to two. From a local viewpoint, the game was one of the best lately played on the Plains field, the work of Portsmouth, except for some rather erratic playing in the outfield in the second inning, being of the gilded variety.

The game was close and exciting until the fifth, when Portsmouth fell upon Hersom and drove him from the box, securing five runs before the smoke cleared away. The locals made things a bit unpleasant for Fernald, Hersom's successor, in the seventh, when three men crossed the plate. Rochester was able to score only in the second and eighth.

Quinn was not in his usual form, but was always effective when the visiting team became dangerous. His arm was not in first class condition and he very wisely favored himself when he could.

Features of the game were Driscoll's great throwing to second; a marvelous one-handed stop by McPheters and the fine playing of Fredrick. For Rochester, Hersom felled well and Norris did good work with the stick.

The High school boys and girls among the spectators gave their team fine support with their inspiring cheers and songs.

One of their members, William F. Akerman, had joined the army of benedicts on that day and it was up to the veterans to properly celebrate the occasion. They arrived at the residence of their brother member and his bride about ten o'clock and from that time until after eleven o'clock they had charge of everything.

"Jim" Davidson was the king pin and kept himself and everybody else busy with songs, recitations and different varieties of amusement. Mr. and Mrs. Akerman served refreshments and the veterans were much pleased with the evening passed with the newly married member and his bride.

Marriage of Two Well Known Young People of This City

Miss Vivian Jeannette Grover, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Grover of 39 Maplewood avenue, and William Frederick Akerman, a popular employee of the Portsmouth Beef and Provision Company, were united in marriage Saturday evening. The ceremony took place at the home of the officiating clergyman, Rev. J. H. Thayer of the North Congregational Church.

The bride was becomingly gowned in a handsome dress of Alice blue silk, with ecru lace trimmings.

The couple was unattended. After the ceremony, the wedding party repaired to the home of the bride, where a reception was held from eight to ten o'clock and a dainty lunch was served.

The popularity and esteem in which Mr. and Mrs. Akerman are held was attested by the numerous handsome gifts from friends and relatives. The bride is an attractive young lady and a decided favorite among her associates. The groom is a genial, active young man and is highly regarded by the firm which employs him and by a large circle of friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Akerman will reside at 39 Maplewood avenue.

OBITUARY

David Norton

David Norton, for many years a resident of Portsmouth, passed away at his home on Cass street on Sunday, after a lingering illness of two years. A shock was the cause of death.

Mr. Norton was born in Stratham and came to this city in 1871, where he worked in the blacksmith shop of Ira C. Seymour. He later embarked in the horse shoeing business for himself at The Creek, giving it up later to engage in the grocery business.

He was recognized as an expert mechanic and a man of steady habits and honest dealings. He had a pleasant disposition and every man, woman and child at the West End knew and liked "Dave" Norton. He is survived by a sister, who resides in Lynn, Mass., and by two daughters, Mrs. James Heggeman and Miss Nellie Norton.

There is no lack of work for painters and carpenters in this city.

FROM TAWRESEY

An Interesting Letter Received at the Navy Yard

The following interesting letter has been received by a friend at Portsmouth navy yard from Naval Constructor John G. Tawressey, U. S. N., formerly stationed here, now at the plant of the Union Iron Works, San Francisco:

It was quite a treat to receive a copy of The Chronicle and to see the familiar names and advertisements.

You have no doubt noted that we are in the midst of another strike. The California was within three or four weeks of completion. We delivered her at the navy yard, Mare Island, yesterday to be completed there. That leaves me but one vessel, the South Dakota, with three or four months' work to finish.

I note that the tug has at last been started at Portsmouth. It is to be hoped that other and more important work will follow. Conditions are such on this coast that no firm could take a contract. Ship building here will stop or be done in the navy yard. If conditions East are at all similar, there is more reason than ever for placing work in the navy yards.

I am always glad to hear from you and from my Portsmouth friends. Mrs. Tawressey and two of the children are with her mother in England. I hope to get East this Autumn, when the work of the board on changes is finished.

Very sincerely,
JOHN G. TAWRESEY.

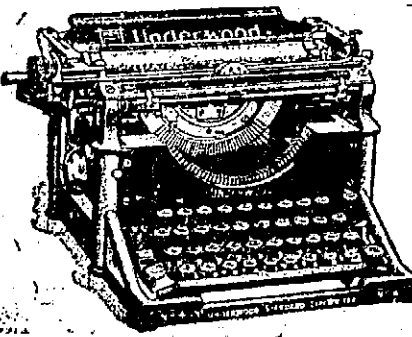

BADLY BEATEN

Marines Were No Match for East
Rochester Team

The Marine baseball team from the navy yard went to East Rochester on Saturday and was beaten by the team of that village, fourteen to two. Roy Sleeper, who was given New England League and New Hampshire Vermont League trials earlier in the season, pitched for East Rochester.

The score by innings:
 Innings 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 R H E

 Marines 0 2 0 0 0 0 0 0 —2 4 7
